The reason of my bad luck in love is that I am too shy. I can't deal with this. If I like somebody very much I behave like a fool. I get nerves so much that I can't think normally and feel myself relaxed. I hate myself because of this. Please help....

Try to feel yourself more confident. Pretend like you know this guy for a long time. Your problem is that you afraid to be not disliked. Act like he has to fight for your attention.

Women usually have their own rules in dating:
At the first date they only want to get to know the person that they are dating . That's why kissing is not always gonna happened. What kiss is involve is a friendly kiss on the cheek when the guy is about to leave.

However, in many cultures, dating is not a way of life. A man or woman is brought together with a member of the opposite sex and goes straight to the issue of marriage without enough preliminary activity. Young single *s, especially in Africa, are even asking about the necessity for dating before marriage.

Even when not clearly formalized, some form of dating still takes place in these cultures where dating is not emphasized as a way of life. It is not just regarded correctly and taken to the fullest advantage. Spouses, especially wives-to-be, are studied covertly through shadow dating.

Dating has a purpose in which people of the opposite sex assess and consider each other as a spouse. In the past, it may have been OK to meet a man or woman and contract a marriage. It probably was all right to watch a woman from afar and propose marriage to her or her parents.

and anyways you can try dating online to meet girls. Maybe if you just chat with them online, get to know them before you meet then it would be easier for you to not be so shy around them when you do meet... just a thought

Yes the internal dressing is also very important. One should be honest with himself. And as it is said confidence is a key to get success this also follows in the field of dating. After this a person's talk, the way of communication, mentality, behavior also matters when he goes on a date.

To my belief, there is no any standards on this.

However, when he introduces you to his parents, its a sign for you that he treats relationships with your as really serious.

I suggest you don't push his on this and just way. Sooner or later a guy would do this step.

I agree with Adviser. Its definitely depends on how your relationship develop.

Its more a sign rather then a thing that can be planned.

If you date for lets say 5 years and he still has not introduced you yet, then it means that he just doesn't take your relationship seriously.

At least he doesn't think about getting married and so on.

Of course there are always exceptions to this rule.

For example, in case when he doesn't have good relationship with his partners.. Probably they do not communicate and that can be the reason why he does not introduce you. But actually this is a sign about something else - its normal to have trustful relationship with parents. So in this case you should clarify why.

smithhiles wrote on Tue, 11 March 2014 10:55 Any advices for online daters so that they can enhance more and learn more..??

I believe that this question should be asked in a very different way.

But first let me provide some background.

What is the goal of relationship between a man and a woman? Obviously its a union.

This is when you have strong, trustful relationship, that eventually transform a couple into a family.

Why we need a family? Because of our future. Its obvious that without children we do not have any future.

The stronger our family is, the better is our future. I mean healthy, smart, efficient population etc.

Overall, dating and particularly online dating are just ways to reach this goal. Since we live in a civilization where its difficult to find a match offline, we tend to use the power of Internet to search for love partner.

So, one more time:

dating - is a way to reach the goal relationship and family is actually the goal

Unfortunately, this principle is often misunderstood and dating is perceived as a goal itself. In this case it becomes more like a sport or a method of vainglory.

Normally, relationship, family and children - its all about rather to give then to get. And vainglory is about to get rather then to give. So technically speaking its when this stream is reversed.

There are a number of reasons for this:

- our instincts drive us to get more and more sex
- mass media propaganda to destroy traditional families (by promoting frequent change of partners, LGBT, alcohol, drugs etc)

Probably someone could say: ok, whats wrong if I date girls/men just for fun? Family is just not for me.

Well, I would not say its "wrong" but it just won't lead you to happiness. You would need more and more partners to satisfy this vainglory, and it actually will never be satisfied. Then after many years all you will have is just a number of broken hearts and loneliness.

So answering to your question how online daters should enhance, my very first answer is: understand, this is not a sport!

My second answer is: you should have a very clear picture of your future love partner, your relationship and your family.

To practice you will need to spend some time and efforts. Literally you will have to draw this picture on a sheet of paper.

This can be done in a form of bullets or an essay. What I can guarantee is that these time and effort always pay back!

You should be really consistent here and always remember that love is more about to give rather than to get.

There is a free online tool that helps to do this exercise: KisKis.net

Comments and feedbacks are appreciated.

A first date means you'll want to be making a fantastic impression. Choosing clothes that make you feel at your best, confident, happy and comfortable is the first thing to keep in mind. Please keep in mind few things

1. Avoid over-dressing or under-dressing for the occasion.
2. Wear a color that suits rather than your favorite color.
3. Use a modest amount of perfume.
4. Wear what works, not what the latest catwalk model is dancing around in.
5. Wear your hair as much as possible in the way you usually do.

These are the some thing every one should keep in mind

Depends if you'e a guy or a girl. If you're a guy, then YOU kiss HER. Don't force it, however. If you're in a situation where a kiss would be inappropriate or surprising, then don't do it. However, if the mood is set and she's almost waiting for you to kiss her, don't let her down! Lean in slowly and kiss her softly on the lips.and also I think it just depends on how the date actually went. If you think it went well and you BOTH had a good time then I'd definitely go for the kiss. Don't push it though,... if you don't think the other person would be as into a kiss as you would be. Besides, if the date went well & you don't kiss, that gives you something to look forward to on the next date

I recently reunited with a guy i was seeing casually two years ago, (on and off), that time i felt that he was cheating with his gf with me but has always denied having a gf. Last february, we saw each other again after 2 years and he started pursuing me, though things didnt go smoothly straight away, things have been going great with us again and the relationship is levelling up, then last last saturday morning I kinda walked out on him, we were sleeping beside each other when he left me in the room to answer a call in a hurry, naked, and then i got upset and decided i need to get out of his house. I realised now that it was such an immature thing to do. You know jumping into conclusion and just storming off like that without really asking him why. Even when he really pleaded to me not to go home. It was only in the morning when i wasnt mad anymore that i realised my action was very hasty. Anyway, i did swallow my pride and went back to his place to tell him im sorry. But he didnt open the gate and his phone was off. I basically told him that i understand if he doesnt want to see me anymore but was hoping that he'll hear me out one last time and I wont bother him anymore. He did message me back and said that he was still asleep and apologised that he missed my call coz his phone was dead and he said that am probably at my dentist appointment already. And so i asked him if i can see him after my appointment and he said 'it's ok, i'm not mad or something'. I decided to swing by his place anyway afterwards before i head back home coz it's quite near my dentist but I missed him coz he was having lunch somewhere so I figured he didnt want to see me so i just said sorry on the phone and he said sorry as well for overreacting. He was planning to come to my event that night and when i asked him if he is still coming, he said he's not sure anymore and he didnt come and i think that he probably wont message me anymore. My friends said to give him some time and space, but my personal trainer said that i should reach out and it's been a week so I decided to send him a casual message to say hi how are, hows the week going? and no reply. (my other friend wanted me to wait for 2 weeks to contact) so I'm guessing he's not interested anymore, and I'm so devastated, I am not sure if i still send him a text message to explain my side so i have peace of mind, some of my friends says yes, and some of my friends says no, so am getting more and more confused. My heart is heavy and my judgement on things a bit cloudy and i need some sound advise, and one of your advises worked before so i am hoping you can help once again. what should i do?

i was thinking that if it still eats me up by friday this week. i will send him this message, so i will have peace of mind and i can focus on my own happiness.

'I think i owe you an apology for my actions the other week. That night, I felt very uncomfortable when you left the room in a hurry with your phone and I just wanted to get out of there. I realised straight away that it was a very immature thing to do and not the best way to communicate but I don't always practice what I preach. I'm sorry I just assumed things and stormed off. I know I acted impulsively and left you probably confused and puzzled, wondering what was wrong without any explanation. And I'm not very proud of that. I know it's too late now and you probably don't care anyway but I do, and I need to get this off my chest.'

Thank you so much in advance

My only concerns is that you will probably be curious about his reaction to this message, particularly in case when he does not reply in full. Does this make sense? Anyway, how about to tell this personally?

Before marriage you need to know each other. Know its strengths and weaknesses. Be 100 % sure that you can trust her. The most important and what most of the people skip is to live together after 2 years of relationship for 1 year and see how it will be. A lot of arguments are coming out because of household chores and habits. If you can live together without any victims then you can marry her.

Some less, some more. You will never get rid of this "fear" so you have to deal with it and act in spite of it. Cease to feel FEAR. Instead, treat it just as EXCITEMENT.

You are not feeling FEAR. You are EXCITED of this new situation.

There are my exceptions:

1. If you've been friends with the person since childhood or for years,so you are not complete strangers.
2. Have been in a relationship with this person before but a second chance is worth it.
3. If it's a one night stand-which I wouldn't even call a date.

Anyway, it's strange for me to kiss an absolute stranger. It's disgusting!!!

What if he or she is weird? What if we run out of things to talk about? What should I order? What shouldn't I order?

Since you can't prepare for most of those scenarios ahead of time, try to stop thinking about all of the things that could go wrong. Trust me, it's not worth the energy. Just try to dress good on the date and feel yourself confident:

1. Wearing Something Out Of Your Hamper
2. Stressing Out Too Much
3. Overly Ambitious Style Choices

That's it.

I'm interested in these two girls. The first one is really awesome, friendly, cute and I can feel she likes me a bit and we had more conversation already. But, she has that common/average appearance. (it seems to be safer to choice her).

Another girl is very-very attractive and really beautiful. While talking to her I was amazed that she is really good. But we communicated not to much and I even not sure whether she is single and whether she likes me.

The trick is that they are close friends and I don't want to destroy their relationship.

my girlfriend considered herself always 'right'. But I have my own opinion and attitude towards practically every situation that happens. Like, I want to play Fallout, she wants to watch movie. And I have to do whatever she wants, otherwise she starts crying. BUT I WANT TO PLAY THIS FG FALLOUT!!!! And we quarrel all the time. I really try to keep patience but it kills something between us.

Do you know the proverb 'A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush'. It is better to have a few really, than seek to have something more and more and more, whatever you have. Bigger, better with the elusive hope that future will be better.

Try to project the sense of this great idea. Look around: millions of people are chasing some elusive desire, try to be better than someone, gain such heights, to become better and more of their idols.

You can spend a whole life searching for and achieving the stuff and people you can happily live without and in the end just sprayed.

Do you really need it? Naturally, all that you need is to perceive adequately and do everything within reason: to learn, to improve, to live in society, to love...

When an end in itself turns into an unhealthy fanaticism it's a great trouble. As they say: stop and prioritize.

And if you are going to chase 'the best stuff' during the whole your life trying to catch 'two birds from the bush' you can really lose everything.

Think of this ending! All you good ..And good luck

However, there is a logical question - why is charming, educated, very successful women lose interest in Russian men and begin to search for a partner abroad? May be, many people know that in Russia there is a significant difference between the number of men and women. The latter are in the clear majority. Conclusion? Some women (especially after 30) can not find a life partner, and therefore have to be alone. Not pretty nice statistics, is not it?

The next thing that causes women to disappointment - this manner of Russian men, their habits and lifestyle. Many of my friends and girlfriends complain that men in Russia initially perceive the love and adoration of women as a matter of course (among them there is a perception that "men should be protected, because they are less") (!)

Thus, the Russian men are not prone to long courtship and nice gestures - in general, they can not be called romantic. But every woman wants to be constantly surrounded with attention and care. It is so natural!

Western men sincerely admire the beauty and intelligence of Ukrainian and Russian women. In addition, men in Russia do not pay too much attention to their appearance and sometimes behave so that a western man will be very surprised (if not - shocked).

For example, the husband of my girlfriend (American) can not grasp why the Russian men can walk on the street and drink beer in the middle of broad daylight, when they have in the United States at this time all the hard work!

The very frankly shocked with the fact how courteous and helpful Western men are. It's a different education and different culture!

Of course, there is one more reason why the Russian girls are looking for the groom abroad. Many people want to find a man with whom you can feel like a "stone wall".

No one will argue with the fact that the economic situation in Russia remains very difficult - as many women are afraid of such instability. They want to be sure not only for themselves, but for their children and want to have a prosperous future.

But I do not think that girls are looking for a partner abroad only out of selfish motives. Summarizing, I can only say that Russian girls are looking for a groom abroad, seek to ensure, as dreams of any man - to find love, respect and happiness ...

In the life of any man or boy may appear dilemma when you have to be torn between two beloved not because of meanness, but because of the banal inability to understand yourself.

How to choose between two girls? Ask yourself whether it is worth to choose if you doubt?

Companion must share your life viewpoint: Lovers of night clubs will not share private life harmony with old-fashioned snob. There are actually a lot of similar life examples. But this rule has an exceptions. Think, maybe she just help you to change anything in your life? You should learn better that she wants and what she loves before making a correct and more appropriate choice.

Of course, being between the devil and the blue sea, you can show generosity and, leave them the choice, because there is plenty more fish in the sea. However, avoiding the problem is not a solution. You should not downplay their interests, if you stay alone, then surely lose.

How to choose between two girls? Think about it, maybe someone of them loves you? Or just want to spend a fun time with you? What if they only want material benefits that may gain from an alliance with you? Some may go to the trick to test the feelings of the girl. The main thing is not to overreact.

Meeting with the parents of your the only and beloved, for which you have decided to ditch the carefree single life, usually happens once.

The ideal period, according to psychologists is in 2-3 months after you decide for yourself to be together like forever lol. Their argument is if you held out for so long, the chance that it will end in a week is not too much.

If you just started your career and can't afford yourself to reserve the place in luxury restaurant, It's better to get acquainted with parents their territory. They will be less tense there. It is possible that home-like atmosphere, with its saucers, jam and quietly muttering TV, will relax somehow everybody.

As for the first visit, it's better to finish your gathering in two hours. Do not let them immediately to get tired of you.

Make them sure that it wasn't our last meeting. And a rate of item is to thank for the fact that they brought up such an amazing person

Good luck

The act of intercepting someone's telephone calls is a criminal, rather than a civil, offence and it is punishable by a either fine or up to two years' imprisonment or both. Phone hacking also involves civil causes of action, which allows its victims to sue for damages.

Moreover, The Guardian tells that: 'Hacking into messages on mobile phones is covered by the same law which now regulates phone tapping and other forms of covert information-gathering, the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000, known as RIPA.'

Anyway, it's nonsense to read smb's messages. First talk to a person, before destroying this private limits. Once the trust was broken, u'll never bring it back. Think of it.

This is cheating! This is worse than cheating! There is no border between real and virtual feelings, concerning actually human feelings. It's all real! Flirt on the Internet - is not just a threat to existing relationships, it is a sign that the family is falling apart, that there is something wrong. Because emotional intimacy is more important than physical ... Yes, it is possible to justify yourself before your partner, that this is all virtual, and you partner may even agree with you. But deep down, s/he will cease to trust you and your love. Because s/he understands - there on the Internet, you're with another person and you felt good about this, and it does not matter that there was no physical intimacy.

As my friend once said, 'Flirt - is inherently an alarm to people as a beacon flashes - I'm free, I'm ready for another relationship, I'm not satisfied with my marriage, etc. I am ready to be the object of your love!'

And what is this, if not treason?

Never read the correspondence of your beloved! Some will agree and say: "It is true, but I can't cope with the interest." Some will not agree and will argue: "Partners shouldn't have secrets from each other." Then why does s/he clean messages and change the e-mail password? Once you glance over the shoulder, s/he becomes indignant.

It is important to stop your curiosity in time. If you live in perfect harmony with your beloved, you tell everything to each other, the mentality is still different. Something can come to your mind that you will never share with your significant other, or with a friend or parents. Personal correspondence (email, blog, SMS) is closed psychological area. That is why you can not read someone else's conversation. Even if you really want.

And never judge by yourself. Everyone should have his private territory. We're different. And because of the lack of respect for personal space, we are setting the stage for a useless conflict. Personal communication - the ability to take off the mask and be those whom you want and relax. You should understand that a man has a right to privacy even more personal than the privacy he shares with you.

It is better to be honest to admit that you are jealous for no reason than to rummage in personal information and as a result look silly. Trust is very important in a relationship. Without trust, the relationship is doomed to failure.

Why then you risk your happiness?

Classifying basic 'needs and requirements' of the girls to her ideal prince can be conditionally withdraw several types of guys whom girls like. And they are not a set of stable characteristics, but an image. And each has its own image of the prince.

I understand you. It's very difficult to forget the person and to bury the feelings, but remember one rule "yours is always will be yours". so if he doesn't really want to be with you, then he is not the one you really need. stop bothering about it. if you need some time, make a "cry-evening" one day. remember everything good that happened to you with this guy, then remember all the pain he did. then wash your face, stop crying and collect your thoughts, that life is going on, with you or without you and you were born to be happy. anyways, if you are happy, while worry about this guy, then it's up to you.

The modern world makes a person spend a lot of time away from home, but it does not mean that we always carry it in our pleasure. To enjoy the pleasures of life, we have to work. We pay the time we could spend with our beloved ones to get what we wanted. Therefore, it is very difficult to build relationships in the modern world.

We come home from work already tired, constantly thinking about work and we do not have enough time to go for a walk with friends. Therefore, we do not see each other for years. It is difficult to find a soul mate nowadays.

But the world has changed and dating sites help to save time and effort. You only need to register, specify information about yourself and indicate what kind of person you are looking for and the system will do everything for you. If you like the person, you keep in touch with someone, or get acquainted with other individuals. In my opinion, this is really is useful and convenient. Try LiveDating.me site and share your impressions. I will wait.

The main thing while choosing candidates for your hand and heart on a dating site is always remain true to your principles.

Be very honest with yourself. Do you like correspondence with the chosen man? Pay attention to everything: errors, abuse of emoticons, style of communication, rudeness and lack of tact, excessive politeness. Anything that irritates or causes discomfort, you should cut. Remember that stimuli become stronger in real life. Dating sites offer a wide choice of candidates for all tastes, you will find what you really need!

Subject: Cheating wife confronted

Posted by HowardCMulbismalayik on Fri, 26 Feb 2016 18:37:21 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

My wife was caught cheating by the neighbor last week so I finally confronted these scoundrels!

We have been married for 8 years and she started cheating 6 years ago. I have the audio and video, log entries with dates and locations with bank statements leading to it, and phone calls traced to my his number (tell you how I got it later) from days and nights I went out in pursuit of them in several different rentals. I've had to rent rooms right next to theirs and it was such a hassle. I have evidence of her having sex, of confessing she likes him, and I know him too well. I "randomly" met him at his favorite local bar. He had no idea. We became good friends for about 5 years.

Anyway they would meet at the weirdest times. I've lost so much money calling into work sick, using money to chase, it has been around 30k in the past 4 years I've been able to count.

Now I had no intention of saying anything since I knew it was no more men. So I let it go and became his friend. But when my neighbor found out, it really ruined things. I had to tell them what I knew and the reaction was far less than pleasant.

Anyway when I brought my neighbor over to tell them what he seen, they all got mad at me. This guy, who I called my friend had called me a liar and a bitch?! Is he stupid?? I'm not sneaking around with someone in a relationship so I'm not a liar or a bitch. I'm a victim.

Now my wife thinks I am weird. She thinks I'm weird but never thought of her cheating? How dumb can she be? In our first year we got married but she never had sex with me claiming she was a virgin. She became pregnant one day, but she told me it was from a sperm donor.

Well it is finally over and I have waited for so long. I just was so upset that no one paused for a moment to actually see all the hard work I put into this case. But I have learned a great lesson in this, and that lesson is to use your own car instead of rentals.

Supposedly the kid is his but I don't care. As long as I can see her smile I am happy. Someone said she is using me for money. LOL how dumb can they be? I was smart enough to get all this evidence myself so I am much smarter than her schemes. She said one day she'd marry that guy but I think she is teasing me. She hasn't seen him in almost a week and he moved. According to his Facebook, I added him through multiple accounts just in case, he is out town visiting old family and friends after a "tragic event"

Any advice on what to do? My friends said I don't listen and stopped talking to me. So I don't have any. Could someone give me a bit of advice? I feel a little lost on this new situation

Of course, to forgive or not forgive infidelity of your woman - it is a personal choice of every man. But I believe that female infidelity should not be forgiven, and if it happened, the relationship should be finished. And do not think that I am a hard and uncompromising person. I understand that everyone has the right to make mistakes, and these mistakes have to be able to be forgiven. But female infidelity - it's not a bug, but a betrayal. Betraying her husband, a woman put herself and her family in the mud. And most importantly, that the relationship with the woman that cheating have no prospects for the future, so there is no washed to continue this relationship.

As corny as it may sound, but the relationship is built on trust. This is the foundation on which men and women can build their own happiness. Often we neglect this "most important", undermining the stability of mutual understanding with the favorite. Only the personal faith of each in the sincerity of their feelings, can give rise to confidence. It's no secret that the confidence - this is the most important thing in a relationship. Between partners it exists when both believe in the sincerity of his own feelings. When a person trusts himself, he trusted and loved one. Take care of each other and appreciate the trust in your relationship. It is better to protect it and not to endanger, which may have a destructive force and unfortunate consequences.

I have been going to an acting class once a week for a couple of weeks now and i have a suspicion that a girl in the class might have a crush or is attracted to me. I'm going to describe what i experienced as well as i can and please tell me what you think.

The first time i really took notice of her was not the first lesson but one or two lessons later. The beginning of that lesson (after the class was broken into two groups btw) her and i had eye contact, she smiled and i smiled back. Later on after the class ended, i walked around the building back to the parking lot and she walks right behind and then catches up to me at the split point between the parking lot and the train station and she asks me if i came by car, i say yes before we say goodbye to each other.

The next time we also exchange eye contact and smiles at least twice and after the class we walked together to the parking lot, she initiated conversation right after walking out of there.

The third time, we exchanged eye contact and smiles 3 times to my recollection. The first of those should have felt awkward as i attempted to get eye contact. It was extended and instead of it getting awkward, i get a smiled and an hello. I felt good and she didn't seem to mind. Later on, i was standing and watching the other act, after looking around, i noticed that she had gotten up from her seat and walked closer to me. We looked at each other quickly before shifting my attention to my classmates act. Later, right before the end of the class, she walks up to me to ask if she is missing a page of the play and wanted to compare it to mine. She was talking Kinda rushed and under her breath so i didn't comprehend everything she was saying after a moment or two she says "we have the same pages" and then rushed of to the entrance. I stay for abou 2 minutes before going as well, to my suprise she is still there looking at her phone, fully outdoor dressed looking like she is about to get out. I go to the bathroom to wash myself an when i go out and passed to the status she starts to walk out as well. I stop to yell goodbye to the teacher and instead of walking past me, she stops as well. Couldn't tell if she said bye as well or was silent but she and i walked to the parking lot again and politely talking to each other before getting to our cars. That was the latest time we saw each other.

What do you think? That was all that i noticed.

Is she into me?

Is she just trying to make a friend?

Is it just in my head?

And if she is into me what do i do?

Their man is #1, the most important thing in the world to them and they care for you in that way. I must get up at 5 am. My wife gets up at 4:30, cooks me breakfast, makes me a lunch (no store bought food could be as good as what she makes) then comes and gently wakes me with kisses and "good words". ..

They always look great! For one thing, there is a high percentage of beautiful women in Russia and Ukraine, it is incredible. But also they NEVER go out of the house unless they look beautiful and they always look beautiful for their man. My wife wants me to say how I like her hair, her clothes, her make-up. She wants to look good for me and it makes her feel good. Don't even think you can go through life without complimenting your woman and telling her how wonderful and beautiful she is many times a day. And ONLY your wife is "beautiful" this is a very powerful word and means "most beautiful of all".

They generally don't want to work outside the house, even though they are usually highly educated (my wife has a masters degree and speaks four languages) and they are NOT lazy. Their DREAM in life is to have a husband, children and cozy home to care for, even if it is a tiny 2 room "flat". They are not demanding. My wife has 8 pairs of *s and thinks it is "excessive" she has asked if now I will "run away" because she has "so many" *s.) She grew up with a family of four in a flat the size of our living room now. You think she is happy? She thinks our small (by American standards) house is about all she can care for properly.

They ENJOY, crave, to look like and feel like women. They are very feminine. ALL of her night wear is attractive or sexy. We never spend a night apart. They want their man to look good, it is a reflection on them if you don't. She cares for my clothes, irons my jeans (!!!!) and checks me out before we go somewhere. If I don't look good, she doesn't look good.

Sexually, ah yes, you knew I would get to that. In general, they never refuse their man, EVER. It is the MAN's responsibility to be, well, responsible. I would never initiate (I never "ask") sex when she is feeling ill. She would not refuse me, I promise, but she would think I am abusive and not considering her. As I said, this is NOT a one way street. They receive TRUE pleasure from giving pleasure to their man. She gives herself to me completely and expects to be pleased the same way.

They NEVER argue. They expect their man to consider their opinion and listen to them. BUT it is the man's job to make the decisions. If I do NOT make decisions and DO the things I need to, she will have no use for me. I MUST do what a man should do. It is my job to relieve her of responsibilities, not boss her around. If you think for one second a man can boss around a Ukrainian woman...wow, have you got another thing coming! She EXPECTS to have everything she "needs" and things she "wants" if it is possible. She expects me to do anything I CAN do for her and the family and not complain, just like she does.

I think a Ukrainian woman would rather cut off her arms and legs than cheat on a good man. They just WILL NOT! They won't do it. As fantastically beautiful as she is, as outgoing and friendly as she is, I am absolutely secure. Not only would she not cheat, she won't even do anything to make me suspicious. Oh...she demands the same from me....

Lately it seems I've been having the same problem with all the guys I meet. I meet them, they seem interested (more than I) and I play it cool for a while. On the first days I don't even care if he texts, sometimes take a while answering because I've got other things on my mind and don't sweat it at all. Then, as I start getting to know them better/liking them I begin to feel very anxious and start analyzing everything.. how long it took him to answer, when was he last online, etc, etc. Then I start initiating contact or plans (not too much though, maybe once or twice), and feel they get distant.

I think part of my problem is that I've was ghosted by a guy with whom I had been going out for about 2 months, he said he wanted to date exclusively and then with time he started fading and eventually disappeared for no apparent reason. It's like he suddenly lost all interest and I never really got to know why. So I think I'm afraid guys will just change their mind and disappear out of the blue. So I become a little obsessive and even though I don't act too much on it I guess they can somehow notice.

So a couple of questions.. how can I avoid feeling this anxiety and keep my cool attitude? It's a confidence thing I guess? Do guys really get turned off once they know you're more available/interested than before? Once it becomes less of a challenge?

And I must say, I'm not even crazy about this guy (the one I'm in this situation with now), still just want to hang out and get to know each other better but I may be somehow acting like I'm really into him..

You are right Abbeycool, all she needs is a loyal husband who can take care of her and family, for this she is also ready to marry a man from a foreign country because as per her opinion foreign men are more responsible than Russian men.

Let People Know That You Like Them

The first one is to let people know that you like them and that you enjoy their company. That may sound like weird advice but for people who are shy one thing about being shy is that you don't express yourself very well and it might be hard for people to understand sort of how restrained you are that you enjoy their company. Therefore saying sometimes that you like their company, is a good thing.

Sometimes it's hard for shy people to say things in person. So if you hang out with somebody maybe you can text them afterward and say like "Hey, I had a great time with you today", you know, that helps too. It's a lot less stressful to do it on a text. Choosing the particular mode of conversation that makes you more comfortable is a good thing.

Smile In Their Company

Second tip, smile in excess. So again, this is about expressing yourself and so both telling them that you enjoy their company and also showing them by smiling. Like especially in photographs and stuff like and don't feel like you need to hide. Though not to have a creep factor though like if you're just smiling the whole time for no reason. That's a problem. I mean smile when you have to. Unless you're genuinely happy the other bonus of this is that like studies have shown that if you smile you tend to feel happier and attractive.

People respond to what they're seeing. If they see someone smiling, like imagine like walking on the street you smile at someone as they go by, they're more likely to smile at you too. And so just even by forcing it in the beginning, you know, fake it so you make it, that can make people around you more comfortable.

Be Active In Conversation

Third tip, put yourself in positions where you have to speak and interact. And this is the advice that we very frequently give new college students. Like you need to if you feel like this is something that you need to get past and some shy people feel like it isn't but if you're just shy and you want to get past it, joining a club where you are forced into a position of interacting with people, speaking publicly, that can be a good thing. It can be a dance or painting class, there's a lot about non-verbal communication that's important.

And it doesn't have to be like a public speaking class where you're up there talking to everybody, it can be like a lot of universities will have sort of like group not therapy necessarily but talking about your experiences and trying to maintain like a low stress level, like that everybody is talking, that can be good. This will give you some common ground that will make it easier for you to communicate when you're approached or when you want to break the ice. You should also involve yourself in activities that you do well, so you can draw positive attention from people with your proficiency without having to speak.

Spend Time With Like-minded people

The final tip is spend time with people that don't make you feel nervous. And don't make you want to make you throw up a little bit. You should experiment with different groups as we were saying but you might find that certain groups of people make you feel more comfortable and it's totally fine to prefer the company of certain types of people. Use the time you don't spend talking to, observe how people you may like act, and what they like to do. And if that gets you out of sort of your rut or gets you out there and interact with people then maybe one group, just stick with them.

Besides a group if you have somebody that you trust, if it's like a best friend that you can confidently and comfortably ask for advice I think that's great too. It's nice to get that feedback. So if you're comfortable with someone, ask them "Hey, do I ever do anything awkward when we're chatting?"

Hopefully those tips will be helpful for you if you are a shy person and having hard time in interacting with other people. But I think that you should test the boundaries to see, like you shouldn't you know, it might be that you're just shy and you can't get over it.

Hey everyone,

So I got myself in a tricky situation. I am new to dating. I told the girl that I just want to be friends. I called her on the phone. She was grateful that I did and accepted my decision. The truth is, I only said it because I thought that it is what she feels. And in order to not get hurt from her saying that SHE just wants to be friends, I did it. BUT when I talked to her on the phone she actually didn't feel the way I thought she felt, she actually wanted a relationship with me. So I want to reverse the process and don't know how to do it!

I really like this girl a ton, a little too much to be honest. We dated 3 times already. The 3rd time she came over to my place. We didn't have sex even though she clearly gave me signs to initiate it, but I thought it was too early and would ruin the relationship.

I would appreciate your help

I am a 21 year old women and I have never had a boyfriend before. Likewise, I feel like men barely hit on me or approach me. I don't know if it is mainly because of my location (I am from a small rural town in the south) but attend college in a mid sized southern city. I visit my hometown a lot. People say I have a babyface (because of my cheekbones) and that I look like I could be 12-14 years old. Even when I go to some events and festivals, people do not hand out flyers to me because I guess they think I am 'very young'. I am slim; I am 5'6 and weigh 125 pounds.

I have only had one older guy approach me when I was 16 years old (I was in Las Vegas) and he told me I was beautiful. Likewise, when I would visit NYC and walk around, men who I did not know would call me beautiful. And one time when I was walking around my college town, a guy said to me 'hello beautiful lady'. I also visited upstate NYC and was surprised when two different taxi driver's also called me beautiful. I feel like when men say this to me, they are not necessarily hitting on me, but rather trying to compliment me (but I mean, I could be wrong?) because they never go further than to compliment me (for example, they never ask for my phone number or seem like they are trying to pursue me). I mean, I have never had a guy pursue me or ask for my phone number. Every once in a blue moon, a guy might stare (and sometimes I stare back) but he doesn't do anything or he just ends up looking away. Even old men in their 50's and up never approach me (even though I would never be with a guy that age, I would be flattered that at least someone approaches me).

I need advice on what I should do in order to get dates? I get worried because I have never dated and I want the experience because I am only getting older. Plus, my family members pressure me all the time and ask me why I do not have a boyfriend yet. At the same time, I do not know if I am overreacting and that I should let life take its course.

Your desire to date men depends how you treat men like as. If you are good looking the no need to worry you will be mostly attracted by men. Its your identical choice to choose them or not.

Just remember whatever you do, do it with mutual consent, sex can be helpful for the relationship if both the partners are willing to do that, otherwise it may also ruin the whole situation. Since you are new in a relationship, its better to take the advice of a dating coach, I advice you to go for elenasmodels.com dating coach advice, she is highly experienced and really good, it would greatly help you to improve your love life.

Salben, from the point of view of a girl she would be disappointed if she was into you and you pulled back. The faster you admit to her that you actually were feeling strongly about her but simply were too shy to admit it, the better.

Strong relationships don't depend on the date number when you had sex but mostly on how strongly want to be together. Quite often in a research about dating they cannot say what leads to what: What was first, the chicken or the egg. Less than a half of research that is published can ever be replicated, i.e. other people get to the same results by asking the same questions. So, one research, especially in a foreign country (or even in a different city than yours), cannot predict what will happen in your particular case. To be universal, results have to be independent on the country and location, and dating surveys are highly dependent on where and how the results were obtained.

Admitting your vulnerability, the fact that you are really into her, helps to build a more trusting relationship, especially if a girl showed her interested clearly.

About almost TWO years ago, my boyfriend who is 37 asked me (28y/o) to do him a favor and to please call his female "friend" to give her an address (which I looked up and it happened to be of a lawyer as far as I can remember). He wanted ME to do it because the woman's husband is somehow violent, and jealous even of his own shadow, so basically it seemed to me that this woman is in some sort of abusive or toxic relationship she has 2 children with this man, and supposedly this man has even been in jail in the past, so my bf wanted me to do him the favor of calling her, just in case the husband picked up the phone out of rage, that way he would think I was just her friend, and would not put her in any danger,, this man had even called my boyfriend numerous times at midnight to tell him to not engage in conversations with his wife. and also smashed his wife's computer for talking too much on Facebook and so on.

So 5 days ago, after almost 2 years of not mentioning her whatsoever after that favor he asked me to do, he mentions me this woman AGAIN!! and the fact that now she is contacting him because she has "suicidal" thoughts that she can't handle it anymore because she is not happy with her life.., so he was emailing her back trying to talk her out of it, and told me that she is a long time friend and he is concerned of her doing something crazy or wanting to kill herself, But I don't know what can possibly be going on here that after almost 2 years he mentions me this women again!!! I am very suspicious whether this can be a lover,an ex,What do you think can be happening?I don't want to be played. gives me a weird vibe.

This guy and I have known each other for over 16 years. It's been nothing but a sex affair. After that summer fling 16 years ago we went separate ways or so I thought. To sum it up I have stopped talking to him numerous times through these years what gets me is he never let that stop him. I'll say he's the most persistent person I know. I cut him off most times because I just stop being interested I guess. He'd call and text a lot, try to find me and I keep the cycle going every time I let him back in. We're both single so it's not a secret affair. Things kinda changed within the past year we see each other more now than i think we ever have consistently. Although he does have family here,he'll still drives 2 hours from another state to be with me. Its still a sexual thing,but it's not hard to see he has some different feelings for me. He likes kissing my forehead, spoons me after sex when we're going to sleep, sometimes not wanting me to leave the bed. He gets jealous if he hears about another man we have had a discussion about these boundaries. I don't know what his true feelings are for me and for the first time ever I don't know what to make of my feelings toward him. Sometimes I think for us to be in each other's lives all these years maybe the universe is trying to tell us something. Any and all thoughts and suggestions about this will be helpful

Widowed after wonderful marriage. Eventually dated some men. It's been 6 years and I'm in a dilemma now. Dated a man on and off for 5 years. Sex is great (still) and chemistry too. BUT he has almost no money for retirement and he is 65. I'm 60 have saved money and want to enjoy my retirement in a few years.

Then I met someone else some time ago. He can take care of himself for retirement, very nice, educated and a professional like me but little chemistry. Sex is just ok (at best). I enjoy his company and he is good to me.

Do so I accept someone as my life partner who falls short in some respect like chemistry or finances, or start all over knowing no one is perfect (including me)? I do want to at least find a partner to live with even if I don't marry.

Bf of 6 years has lied about his finances in past to make it sound better than it is (he racked up a lot of credit card debt he couldn't afford). Because of this I never lived with him. We do love each other and have chemistry. He is finally getting his finances back on track after much effort on my part of helping him budget etc and him getting a modest cash gift from family. However I find out that his elderly mother is in credit card debt up to her ears and he is working it out through lawyers to close her account (he handles her affairs as her POA). Trouble is he used that account from time to time when he claims he was short on cash including paying car insurance (every month including up to January) but the REAL issue for me is when I asked a month ago he said he only used her card for gas from time to time (he now says he told me car insurance but I don't recall that at all and then he told me he "forgot" they debited his mom's account every month). What made me ask was I noticed he used her card to pay for an expensive dinner in January and I got really upset so he put his own money in her account to pay it. Today, he tells me he closed his mom's account and is paying down the other one (each month in a good amount) and he called the bank to start debiting his car insurance from his own account (now that I "caught him" right?). I suppose now I need to decide if all these lies should be excused since he wants to move in now? Is it worth the risk ???

BEFORE saying just move on PLEASE read my reason for writing this. Relationship or not this person has been a very important part of my life. She has helped me through the suicide of my mother and multiple things after that. Although the relationship is over I still wish to someday be her friend. But im afraid i've hurt her even more after the break up. My reasons being:

Reason #1

After the break up i deleted her off of my social media only for her to add me back a month later because she wanted to make sure i was ok due to an injury i had sustained playing sports. While she rarely posted anything on social media, when she did it was mostly quotes about self love and songs about romance or break ups.

Reason #2 When we reconnected 4 months after the break up we caught up with each other over text. But what was strange was she mentioned how other guys would hit on her often but told me she wasn't interested because they weren't her type. She also opened up to me about personal problems she had (depressed, grades, stress, ext.) and told me how it was so easy to open up to me but opposite when it came to her friends and family.

Reason #3 She decided to intentionally visit a place she knew i would be at. I know this because she stared at me for a good duration of the time. During this time she saw hanging out with my friends and just laughing and having a good time. I finally decided to talk to her an hour later and we had a small conversation. Afterwards i went back to my friends.

Reason #4 A week after the visit from her she started posting almost daily. Selfies, hangouts, eventually even other guys. I assumed we were on good terms so I shot her a text telling her that I was thrilled that she was doing better now. unfortunately, she did not reply so i backed off and didn't text her again. She has and is still constantly positive things now and im truly happy for her.

our most recent conversation was when she sent me a merry Christmas and i sent one back. After she saw it she texted me back and we had a short conversation.

Thanks for reaching out and welcome to the forum.

It seems that you have provided quite many details in your post, which I for sure appreciate. However, in order to come up with certain recommendations, I feel that two important pieces of information are still missing.

1. My first set of questions is:

- how do you feel about her now?
- how do you think she feels about you now?
- you mentioned that the relationship is over, but is it really over? is there a strong and objective reason for that?

I mean, sometimes (actually, often) people break up and then reconcile. If you both still miss each other, what prevents you from being together again? I feel there is some background that I'm missing here.

2. The second question is, what's actually the problem? Can you formulate exactly that's your problem (or your question)?

This is actually very important per (for you at first). I do understand how difficult it could be to state the problem, but the effect of simply formulating it definitely worth the effort. The more precise you put it, the greater the effect will be.

We are here to listen.

Take care.

How i feel about her? I still have a spark of feeling left for her but i miss her friendship more than anything. We used to always hang out and laugh about the dumbest things even before the relationship. Everything was easier when i was around her and i could act like myself completely.

Im not sure how she feels about me. Im afraid i hurt her when she came to visit me and saw that i was happy. Why? because she had previously opened up to me about her struggles and to see that i was happy while she wasn't triggered her in some way such as the social media spam. I hope it is just because she i truly happy because its been 5 months since the break up.

I just hope i didn't hurt her while trying to be there for her.

Basically my question is that did i hurt her when she saw me being happy? What can you tell from the reasons i listed?

Thanks for replying. Based on how you described the situation, it looks like she did get hurt. Not sure if it was inevitable or if you could do anything to reduce her suffering though.

Assuming you'd like to decrease her hurt, I'd propose a couple of questions to consider:

- Does she clearly understand the reason(s) for the break up? Does she agree?
- Does she have a false hope that you can get reunited somehow?
- Is there anything that isn't clear for her about the situation?

Usually, the less unanswered questions one has, the better the person feels about the situation..

What do you think?

When she broke up with me she told me she needed to work on herself. She told me she was afraid we wouldn't work because of the distance. When we reconnected she told me she thought it was due to immaturity and apologized to me.

I don't know if she wants to reunite but recently she has been warming up to me. when i reconnected with her she told me she wanted to text me but didn't have the guts to. In fact she told me that she saw me once and decided to completely avoid me. Now when she sees me with our mutual friends she would always come up to me and talk to me first and make conversation. As i mentioned she also contacted me for the first time on Christmas. Im not sure if these signs are her wanting to get back with me but it seems like she isn't harboring any hard feelings.

I'm not really sure what to think about it cause ive never had a break up so confusing.

I think the easiest way to get in touch with woman from specific age is to look at some dating site. There you can search by age and also while reading the profiles you will decide who is the most suitable for you to contact.

It is needed to get to know each other better, and as long as dating lasts it is better in order to be completely sure if it is the right person or not.

you cannot marry if you don't have to date unless you were in a fix marriage.

I think dating is a must before marriage because we can know about each other by dating.

I agree Russian females like to be independent and live their life own way. but I also notice that Russian are so loving when they chose a guy by heart.

I am 32 years old and met this 26 year old female on tinder 1.5 years ago. She had just broken up from a 5 year relationship and just wanted to fool around with guys, which was perfect for me because I was not looking for anything serious either.

Sex was amazing for both of us, but communication was problematic right from the start. She would answer my texts after 6 hours or the next day. She always seemed aloof and uninterested. Even though she treated me like she didn't want to see me anymore, she would always get back to me and meet me once every 1 or 2 weeks just for sex (which as I said was awesome).

The problem is I started to develop feelings for her, and at some point I realized that I had never loved someone so much. I know it sounds ridiculous but she was the only thing on my mind 24/7 and I was crying all day long. I had been in long term relationships in the past but I never knew what it actually meant to be in love until I met this special lady.

At some point after one year of knowing each other, I took her out for a drink and told her how much in love with her I was all this time. She said "you should be really lonely, I feel sorry/pity for you", and she disappeared.

It was her choice to let me go so I did not contact her again, until 6 weeks after that, she sent me a text at 5am (probably drunk and horny) telling me that she's thinking about me a lot and she wants to see me again etc.

So now we're seeing each other again once every month or so and just for sex. I still have the same feelings for her and I feel terrible/miserable every moment I am not with her. In other words, seeing her is not good for me!

Any suggestions? Should I humiliate myself again by telling her how much in love with her I am? Should I pretend I'm cool and say nothing and wait to see what happens? Should I just leave her? But I can't just leave her!!!

Subject: MMet a great girl who's moving, not ready for a relationship but wants me to keep in touch and visit

First time posting, not sure how this all works.

About 7 years ago I (29/M) met a girl I fell for super hard and she strung me along, used me, and eventually I found out she was engaged the entire time. This hurt me pretty badly to the point that I gave up on romance and just engaged in one night stands for a few years. I didn't want to get hurt again. Eventually I started "dating" people again, but never longer than a few months. I got into some "relationships" that I realize now I was only in just for the sake of having a relationship, and I couldn't give them the emotional reciprocity they were seeking. I know it's selfish of me, but that's just where I was.

Which brings me to the story at hand. About 6 months ago I matched with this girl (26/F) on Hinge. We spoke for a little bit, but never wound up seeing each other. At least not at first. After a few months we started texting semi-regularly. She's a chef from Peru, and we have many common interests like music, traveling, and generally the same worldview. She's passionate, driven, has a kind heart, she's not world weary or overly cynical, and she makes me laugh. It doesn't hurt that she's beautiful either. Eventually I got her out on a date and we hit it off. Nothing too fancy, just some drinks. A few weeks later we went out again, going on a walk in the park that night. We kissed, held hands, all that stuff. We went out a few more times after that, each better than the last. We both felt very comfortable around each other, and I found myself falling for her. There was just one problem: she told me she was moving to Berlin to open up a restaurant with her boss/former coworker. Obviously that seems like a dealbreaker, but it just so happens I lived in Berlin for 2 years, went to school there. So instead of giving up on her I wrote her a little guide to help her get acquainted with the city and its customs, gave her some sites to check out, sent her some apartment hunting websites, etc. She also said that if I ever came she'd let me stay with her. I never pretended like she wasn't leaving, but I guess in my *ed up little mind I thought, given my ties to the city, we might be able to work something out.

So last night we went out again, walked around, had some drinks. I asked her if I was going to see her again before she left and she told me she wasn't really looking for anything sentimental, that she had gotten out of a 3 year relationship with her ex last year and wasn't looking for anything. So, given that she was being honest with me, I was honest with her: I told her that I'd never met anyone like her before, that if she was going to any other city in the world I might not have brought it up, and that I was sure that she was going to achieve what she wanted in life more than anyone I've ever met. At this point she almost started crying, and she said was at a point where she was trying to learn how to be alone with herself before looking for a relationship, but she told me she thought I was really great and interesting, and she thanked me for never letting her feel stupid like her ex had made her feel and that she hoped we could still be friends because she found me really easy to talk to and I made her feel good. She also said that everything we did together was what she felt like doing and not what she felt like she had to do, and that if I ever came back to Berlin she would want to see me. I didn't rule out the possibility of friendship in the future, but I told her I needed some space and that I couldn't see her again before she left, but I said that I didn't regret our time together and I wish her nothing but good things. She understood, and told me she was sorry and I told not to be, that I didn't regret it and I'd do it all again if I could. So I walked her home and we kissed each other on the cheek before we said our goodbyes.

That was last night, and though it doesn't hurt as bad as I'd feared it might I'm still feeling pretty shitty. I deleted all my dating apps because I know I'm not going to be in any shape to date anyone for a while. She really was the girl of my dreams, and I'm not bitter about it, but that doesn't stop it hurting a bit. I guess if I got anything really great out of this it's that I learned that I could feel things I didn't know were possible, so maybe someday there's a chance I could feel it again?

Anyway, that's my rant. I guess my question is, given the circumstances, is it worth it to keep in touch with her?

I need someone to share my story with, and psychiatrists are something I can't afford right now.

My whole problem begins with a breakup, but please don't judge me. I know it is an everyday thing and that I have to be stronger, but:

May 2019. I have had a boyfriend for four years. He was my best best friend. We had fun all the time, laughing, loving, everything was so easy. We didn't have to force anything. Everyone around us was saying that they wanted a relationship like ours.

We had a long-distance relationship. An hour's plane rides away, but we were seeing each other quite frequently and communicating all the time.

I was doing my med studies. He was studying economics there, so it was good so that we could focus on our education. Our plan was, after I finish med school, to come where he is and do my surgery specialization there. That was supposed to happen in January 2020.

Then, out of nowhere, he said that he wanted a break. I didn't agree because I don't believe in breaks and he broke up with me.

We were planning our summer vacation two days before, and just like that, he decided he wanted to break up. The reason he said was that the distance was too much. We had only six months left until I come there.

One week before that, he went out with friends that were visiting the town where he was, and there was this girl he then met for the first time. A month after we broke up, they started seeing each other. They went on weekends together (that fast). They were buying gifts for each other. They even went public.

I had my doubts since the beginning, but he was always denying them and lying. Then he confessed to me and said she was only sex (yes, we were communicating the whole time, mainly because we missed our friendship).

Six months later, she told him she wanted a relationship. He said to her that he couldn't let me go and that he wants to try again with me, that he never saw her as something more serious. Now we are on a track to get together again and I am in a town 40minutes away from him (as our plan was).

After we broke up, I was devastated. I never ever expected something like that from him. He was always taking care of me. I felt like I lost the person I was closest too, and the person who cared about me the most. I had suicidal thoughts. I stopped hanging out with people. This goes deeper because my father was an alcoholic and physically abusive but died out of lung cancer.

I grow up learning how to take care of myself, and I was quite an individualistic person until I met him. Until he became my best friend and lover and I was like hey, relationships can work. Someone can take care of me. I never expected anything like this from him. Never, ever.

So I had a depression episode. I took antidepressants, but for two months only because they took away my concentration and focus.

He showed me their last conversation, where he says to her that he chooses me, and she says, 'Oh give it a month with her, and you will see that we are soulmates, ours was love at first sight.'

I know I shouldn't have, but I have read their conversations. And the times when he would contact me during our breakup, were either the times when they were fighting or the times when she said she wanted to become more serious. But they were fighting all the time, with bad words and everything that we never ever did. We were always communicating.

She even said that she will move for him in another country (because she lives where I live, so it is still long distance)

He said that he never considered her as serious until 10 days ago. He said that he remembered the time with her, and he doesn't feel good. I don't know what that meant because he got angry and pulled away. He said that he wants to end up with me, that we will work things out (we are not together, we are trying to work things out), and that he sees future with me, not with her, but that he has some internal issues he has to work on and want to :break up: again. Only to find out he was communicating with her and now still is, after our final break up. When I asked him, he said no I don't communicate with her. But he was lying.

I don't get it, their last conversation was brutal, he told her he chooses me and wants to leave her and she was so brutal with words, and now they are together again.

I feel like I am not good enough. Like he saw for the second time what am I VS what she is and decided she is better in so many way. Even when I was 40minutes away from him and she was 1000km away. Me and her don't have one thing in common, which makes me feel like he has wanted someone like her this whole time. Like he now realised he was with the wrong person this whole time (me). I feel so not worth it, I feel like she is better then me in everything, I became obsessed with her. She is prettier. She is more interesting. She is four years older than both of us.

She always has make-up on, her character is flirty and somewhat manipulative and I know she talks bad things about me because she is so upset that he was mentioning me all the time. She is everything I am not. I see her everywhere I go, I dream of them together... I can't let this go, it hurts so much. And I am so scared that they will work out, I am so scared I feel like my soulmate has another soulmate. It hurts so much, because I love him. I don't feel joy in the things I used to, but I feel joy when I am with him. I feel like I am at home. Only sometimes home is haunted by ghosts.

He called me three days ago to ask how I am and to tell me that he has been crying and misses me and sees me as his wife. But that was it. He is still with her, but I haven't confronted him about that, I didn't know how to act when he called.

I don't recognize myself. I feel like this face is not mine; this hair is not mine, so why take care of it. These toxic thoughts were never something that I had. I was a strong person. I went through a lot in my childhood, and now I am ashamed of myself. I can't stand myself. He was my best friend, we did everything, literally everything together..

I feel like I only bother people and that I am boring. I have friends that have happy relationships, and I envy them. I feel so guilty about that. I love them, I want them to be happy, but I envy anyone who has a happy relationship now.

I feel like I am not worth it because, after a night of meeting her, he decided she is worth throwing our relationship away. And they also became real close fast. They went on weekends together. They bought each other presents. He even came secretly for a weekend at her town to visit her. Something he has never done for me, and I was always asking for.

I feel like she is everything he wanted, while I was a work in progress, struggling with my depression because of the break up and not being interesting enough. She practices yoga, is slimmer and more elastic than me, funnier, she hasn't been with him through a lot and theirs is new, without the habit or the burden. I feel like such a weight to people..

and last night he called me. Confessed that he is communicating with her, and that she is talking * about me (but he didnt say what he is talking about me).. he says he is not confirming those words because he knows they are not true but still listens to them. Someone who knows me for 5 years gets on the side of the person he knows for 5 months.. Its like my best friend betrayed me. He says that she is not that interesting to him anymore, that they argue every other day, but they keep communicating because he doesnt want to be alone. He says he imagines his future only with me but that's it. The conversation ended that way. He says all this but still chooses her at the end of the day...

I keep imagining them both happy and laughing and in love . and laughing at me... Whenever I watch a movie or read a book about new love starting or love at first sign and everything that follows, I imagine the two of them. Don't get me wrong, I am a girl with hobbies. I paint, I play the piano, I cycle, I hike, I love reading books, I learn new language right now... but they are in my mind. And all I want is to go to sleep because then my mind is silent. If , of course, I dont dream about them being happy..

Please guys, I really need advice and help. I would appreciate it ...

Hello all,

Hope you can help me in this situation.

I met this guy at a local university event. Our side conversation led to us exchanging numbers. He was charming, respectful and said all the right things. Soon we were conversing via text, Instagram and then FaceTime.

Few months go by and we shared that we have developed feelings for each other. We talked about long term relationship and both agreed that we are not in it for fun.

One day he called and my phone connected to my brother's Bluetooth device. My brother answered the phone and my bf hung up. He then started to question me on who the guy was who answered my phone. Despite me explaining he continued to doubt me as it happened more than once.

He asked me to never contact him again and called me FAKE.

Finally, we talked and he agreed to drop that topic. Few months later, my best friend told me that he was talking to other girls. Her sister was also getting texts from her. I didn't believe anyone cause I didn't want to believe! I continued to trust him.

Few weeks ago, one the girls he was taking to approached me on insta and sent me all the screen shots of their convo. I later found out he was dating three girls at the same time he was telling me that he was serious about our relationship and wanted to marry me.

I questioned him and he denied everything. It wasn't until I showed him copies of his texts to others girls that he admitted that he screwed up and apologized. He still didn't tell me that he was maintaining an intimate reply with other two girls.

My heart doesn't want to break up cause I love him.

What should I do? Am I wrong? My brother said, I should have self respect and create distance.

I'm so confused and it's affecting my studies! Please help.

Sara

Hey, go for it. We are young for love at any age and the figures in the passport shouldn't be an obstacle to be happy. Check your compatibility, there are many online tests and astrology, I personally prefer Volikov test. I believe there's no limit. Just make sure you both expect the same thing from this relationship, so noone is heartbroken after all.

Sounds like both of you aren't on the same page now, and you started on the same page when you met. You both just wanted sex and casual encounters before, and now it sounds like that's what she wants still and you're developing feelings. That's a tough situation and feel for you. I hope it works out for you but it's difficult when you can't control how someone else feels.

I disagree with this advice. You're training yourself to only feel confident while drunk, which can lead to all types of problems like becoming an alcoholic.

I have kissed on the first date and not kissed on the first date. I think it depends on the two people, how the date is going, how much chemistry you have with the other person, and so on.

Hello everyone,

I'm looking for some advice about a situation I have experienced with a girl.

I'll keep it as brief and detailed as possible:

I have been frequenting the gym alot, regularly 4 times a week, in the past few years. Located in the city centre, the place attracts alot of people.

This is where I developed a crush for this one girl, who also frequents the place, to work out with her female friend.

Quite good looking, I figured she shouldn't have any problem getting attention from men. Sometimes I did notice a cold, stand-off'ish kind of attitude in her.

Things did change when at a certain time, she approached me - fully smiling -, asking a rather silly question and me simply answering her.

Having answered her something strange took place:

We stood there, both looking each other in the eyes, untill I noticed a sudden dilation in her pupils, with her swiftly turning around and leaving.

I'm not quite sure whether I scared her, attracted her, or maybe both...

After that moment, we saw each other in a bar, but me - lacking the balls to go up and talk to her - played it 'cool' and started becoming stand-off'ish myself. Both of us did recognize each other that moment.

The same week, both of us are working out in the gym, when at a sudden moment she comes standing straight in my path, blocking my road, just looking at me.

Me, honestly still into her, again lacked balls, ignored her and went out of her way.

The last time I saw her, was in a grocery store, accidentally passing and standing in front of each other, I froze still, letting her pass, with her turning her head away, turning it halfways (no eye contact), to turn it away again.

So, Essentially, I really just want to go up and talk to her, ask her out and just get to know her. However, I can get confused due to the turning her head away and stuff, thinking she might not be open to it anymore.

Recently, I found out something about her, which I must've forgot during the times I saw her at the gym:

7-8 years ago I knew this guy (a drug dealer).

He couldn't stop telling me about this girl - always saying we would make a great match due to similar personalities and -interests and shared life-problems.

Me, not really into meeting people this way, eventually got kind of curious about this person was.

He admitted having told her about me aswell.

So, one day he took me up to her working place, tried introducing us, but we never really met and simply got to see each other.

I didn't really bother it and forgot about her.

I did find out that my 'gym-crush' and the girl, the other guy was talking about, are the same person.

So, maybe, while I quite forgot about that moment, she might've remembered, I don't know.

So, now I'm wondering:

How do I take it from here?

I figured it might be an idea to just ask her if she knows the guy, and when she answers 'yes', to tell her straight up he did tell me about her and just admit I couldn't muster up the courage to talk to her.

And then simply ask her out.

However, I'm wondering if that stuff is way too personal, too soon?

Does it matter to mention I lacked the courage?

Also: Am I overthinking these things?

Like the eye-contact stuff at the gym, passing each other in the grocery store.

Sometimes it feels as if I'm looking for way too much meaning in these events and maybe block myself doing this, leading to freezes and anxiety.

On the other hand, the crush I have is real and genuine.

So, any advice, input, opinion, etc. is greatly appreciated!

Thanks for reading.

For the past month, I've been dating a woman, she's 28, a chemist, smart, attractive, maybe even a little nerdy to a degree, but I like that. She has a daughter that will be 2 yrs old next month.

So I knew my dad had a daughter back in Jan 2019 with a younger woman whom he worked with, but I never met or seen her, as im not close with my dad.

Here's where I was able to put it altogether:

I knew her name was Rita. The woman I'm dating is named Rita.

Rita mentioned that Emma's dad was named Jerry. My dad's name is Jerry.

Rita mentioned that she worked with Emma's dad and he was significantly older.

Rita mentioned she worked at the same company as my dad, though she works somewhere else now.

Rita mentioned that Emma's dad passed a kidney stone while they were dating. My dad has passed several.

In fact I remember when this happened back in March 2018 because our paths almost collided then. My dad had texted me to see if I could take him to the ER. He had been with my 8yr old half brother at the zoo and began having pains. He tried to drive himself, but ended up pulling off at a park and was laying on a picnic table in agony. I was going to bring him to the ER, and started driving there, but then he texted me and said Rita was a few min away and was going to take him. She brought this up while we were watching Seinfeld reruns. There is an episode where Kramer has a stone and passes it at the circus. Rita said that Emma's dad yelled so loudly from the bathroom when he passed his stone, that she couldn't imagine how painful it was coming out of a man's penis!

I really like this woman, but I'm not sure I can go further with this. We haven't had sex yet. I want to have sex with her, but not sure I could bring myself to do it knowing my dad had her first. I also dont want to tell her about this nor will I say anything to my dad. I guess its a just a freak, small world type of thing that I'd meet her.

I'm 25 so I know I have plenty of other options for women out there, but I happen to like this one quite a bit. But her daughter is my half sister! UGH!

Russian females can provide warmth that is real love, and care.

If he is asking this, again and again, that means he has feelings for you. He is in love with you. :)

Think good things and have a positive attitude. There's no need to advertise your shyness.

It depends on how comfortable you both are. If you feel and your partner is perfect for each other on 1st date.

My husband and I have been married for quite a few years and things lately have gotten a little stale; we both work a lot and there doesn't seem to be a lot of passion left between us. I am looking for something we can do together to get us back to where we used to be. I was thinking of couples counseling but I don't know that it is too serious. We talked about having someone join us but I am honestly too worried that will damage the relationship, as we're both kind of jealous people lol.

I was thinking of asking him to try this game called Halos and Sins.

Is there anyone tried it or anything similar that worked for them?

Any and all suggestions appreciated!*

Recently I fell in love with my girl best friend (few months after I broke up with my ex). She is just so sweet, adorable, and cute that anyone would fall in love with her. Later on, I told her about my feelings and asked her what she feels, she replied "this is a prank, right?" I was scared and said yes it is a prank. Later that week I wrote her letter again telling her about my feelings and also that it's not a prank, after the letter she seemed to avoid that specific topic. But then I asked to sit down and clear the things. She said she has always pictured me as a loveable brother and she can't think about getting into a relationship because of the whole brother thing. Well after some time I discovered that she had a bf about which she told me that he is just her good friend. Now what should I do, I feel betrayed by my best friend. But I still have feelings for her. How can I tell her that the of "us" in a relationship is far better.

With all the lockdown and restrictions imposed, should I start or at least try dating sites or apps this time? I've been stalking on social media, tried to start a conversation but it has been hard to find a date, virtual date these days.

If it's a real connection you can kiss even on the first date.

I'm very late in my dating game. I had a couple of short term relationships, but I think I was more interested in the idea of a relation then the actual girl. that's sort of my intro

This is my problem. I've been able to get many first dates but they haven't stuck. My issue is that small talk is very difficult for me. Also if it's not brought up organically how do I ask a girl what she likes to do. Asking her flat out seems very cliché
