Are you a catfish who has fallen in love?

A major cable network is looking for people who are falling in love with someone online and have yet to meet! Have you built a relationship over the internet and perhaps embellished the truth about your profile to impress your love interest? Is your job not as impressive as you led it to be, or maybe you're unemployed? Maybe your weight isn't quite what you suggested, your profile picture is from 10 years ago, you said you were close to your family, but haven't talked to them in years...or is your fabrication even more extreme?

If the time has come to finally meet your love interest but you need to transform yourself to the person you promised to be first, we would love to hear your story!

Please email castingonlinedaters@gmail.com

Name/Contact info/Age/Occupation/Partners info/How you met/What "truth" did you embellish/Do you plan to meet your love interest in person

Please share a little about yourself and make sure to include recent photos

I think you should decide to unknown person only when you are clear in find and felt that particulate person is perfect for you and their some understanding in between you and him.

According to online dating experts, forbearance, honesty and a attractive profile are all anyone needs to find true love. Brenda Allison told us her story. In 2005 she moved to Chicago. There, she found a group of friends who greatly supported her, a housing within walking region of the city's hottest places...and perfectly no time and possibility to date... Read more:
