Don't be telling lies to people that you might eventually meet up with. It is important for you to exercise caution in what you say. Honesty built a good relation in dating.

Very much. White lies are seen in dating, but I would suggest for this tradition to break-out as it is followed by many online and personal daters right now. White lies will go into nothing you know. Still, along the process, every truth will come out and you'll just be disappointed if you know you're dating a liar. According to <http://theguide.dailydater.com/article11.html>, "it's a normal part of dating. What you really have to watch out for are the guys who will outright lie about something that could affect your decision to keep seeing him or not. If he's playing too fast and loose with the truth, you need to know."

It depends on what you mean by being "honest". I'm always being honest to other people (especially for women I'm dating with). But if for example you have a kid with a woman that you are no longer with then you won't say at the first few dating meetings "Hey. I must say to you that I've got a kid. Does it matter for you?", because it's just weird. Ofc you will need to say that but not at the beginning. The proper time for it would be when you will hang out with her some time and if you will see that she is interested in you and she would like to be in a relationship with you. But if you mean a lying about yourself then she will learn the truth today or tomorrow. Or even worst and the high probability is that you will get lost in your testimonies, believe me.

Definitely. Honesty is crucial, as for me. I've been into several relations and it all crushed without it.

Better be honest. But I agree that you don't have to tell me all about yourself on the first date. Maybe you will not like the person and you will not meet again.

Yes agree. Honesty is always the key but sometimes content is everything. Honesty can hurt someone, but if you aren't being deceptive then it might be ok.
