I have known a girl since a week. We have been talking every day now. Today we had an interesting conversation in which she talked quite a lot about her family, both fun and sad stories. I wonder if this is a good sign? Is she opening up to me because she feels comfortable or does she see me as a friend?

I also have the impression that she seems to wait for me after work so we can walk to our car together. She also starts some conversations. On the other hand she waits about a day to return mails.

Today just before we parted I told her I really liked our conversation and that I'd like to repeat it. She said: "Me too!" One of these days I will try to speed things up ...

Is it a good sign she elaborated about her family?

Sounds like a good sign she is talking about her family! That usually means you made her feel comfortable which is good! I wouldn't read too much into it. Just try and get her to elaborate more on that and other topics of interest.

It is good sign. She is open to you.

For instance, she rejects a man, she never talk about detail of her family.

Do you like her? If the answer is yes, you can try to ask her out for having a lunch or dinner. Don't only once time, but do it several times. After this, you and her can get into a new relationship.

It's time to kick him to the curb, if he doesn't set all these implausible demands.

1. He has a complete life, but also he is totally obsessed with all aspects of your existence. You want a man who is like a cyclopedia for all stuff you feel, like and say, who will inform you about your yoga class at the first Tuesday of the month. But, dear, none of those clingy guys!

2. In under 30 seconds he can cook deli-quality pumpkin risotto. Seems like it's true, that a man who can cook is the hottest phenomenon ever!
But don't delude yourself by one of those men who in half a minute will complete this south Spanish dainty. He have to esteem your time; you've got things to do!

Anyway, you'd better to read the whole article

Of course, each of us has repeatedly faced with situations that seemingly defy logical explanation. But they have completely changed the situation - for example, this occasional meeting of a friend who knowing that you are looking for a job, gives you a phone number of an employee. Although, until the day you have not seen this friend for several months, or even years.
Such examples are myriad. We often think this is just a coincidence and nothing more. However, even in the biographies of famous people, famous personalities are precisely such meetings, allowing them to not only to change lives, but also became the first stepping stone to success and recognition.
Therefore, signs interpreting is a private matter.
